

The Craco Census of 1857

The "Stato di popolazione per l'anno 1857" for the "Comune di Craco" provides a unique insight into the town and its inhabitants during that era. This historical document will help Society members learn more about the old town and also provide them with details about any ancestors that were residing there 150 years ago at time before the town and Italy was changed by unification.

The census was submitted to Italian authorities as complete on January 30, 1858 and reflects the status of the town as of year end 1857. The makeup of the town was reported as 594 adult males, 769 adult females, 252 males under 14 years old and 228 females under 12 years old for a total population of 1,843 inhabitants. They resided in 503 separate households.

The folio is formatted in large sheets that measure 16 inches by 10 inches with columns across two pages that tabulate the information recorded by the enumerator. The left hand page captures the location and household composition quantifying the members by factors of relationship to the household head, age, and sex along with totaling the members of the family.

Following is the data that was recorded in the columns of this page of the form.

The Town Make-up

As might be expected the town was totally based on an agrarian society. The vast majority of the town's households were employed in various forms of farm labor with their employment listed as "Contodino." This term, which is often translated as peasant, was much wider in scope and did not define any of the skills and professions that were necessary to manage the farms.

There were 316 households classified as contadino and they were laboring on the land owned by the 164 households listed as "Proprietario" - landlords. There is no way the census could provide an understanding of the interactions between the classes however during this era each Italian "... municipality resembled a large family – intensely loyal to its members and rituals." The locations of the households on the streets in the town suggest that in some parts of the town they lived together in close proximity regardless of social status, while there were also some streets that were densely populated with peasants, and areas outside the street limits (characterized as "blank") that were probably farms with no peasants listed.

Besides those working the land there were others in the town making up part of the structure.

At the lowest end of the spectrum were 4 households classified as "mendia" – beggars. All four households shared a similarity; they were headed by single women. In one case, a 62 year old widow, who probably had no family to take her in lived alone while in the case of the other three households the three women were all mothers of young children classified as "illegittimo" - illegitimate. In one of the households there was also an older sister residing there that was unmarried and her health condition was noted as "Zoppo" – crippled. There was one other individual in the town classified as mendia and it seems to be an unusual arrangement. This was a 20 year old woman that resided with a peasant family. The head of the household was a widow and the relationship of the 20 year old to the head of the household was classified as a "Domestica" – servant but the younger woman was not in good health being classified as "Valetudinario" - sickly or weak. The other members of this household were two adult sons and an adult daughter all of whom were unmarried and in good health. Perhaps, this was some act of kindness on the part of the household by taking in this sickly girl since it would seem that the other members would be able to perform the duties and chores of the "casa" rather than rely on a domestic.

Supporting the specialized needs of the town were a small group of tradesmen and service providers. Many of these were classified as proprietaro but also listed with the services or trade they provided. Logically, someone operating as a blacksmith, miller or furniture maker would need to own their own property to house the specialized equipment needed to operate their trade. And in the case of the town's blacksmiths all 3 households owned property with a fourth person in town classified as "Ferraio" that was the unmarried 22 year old son of one of the smiths. There was only one miller and one barber but the services they provided were probably also done by most individuals as part of their household routines and probably utilized the miller and barber for special circumstances.

There were 6 "Filatrice" – spinners, none of whom owned property and were probably processing wool from the farms. There were 3 women who were widowed in this group and lived alone. The one unmarried woman who headed a household also had an unmarried sister living with her whose health was classified as "Pazzo." There were two older men also listed as filatrice who headed households without children but were married with their wives classified as contadino. Perhaps this trade was available to those who were not able to perform the labor required of a contadino or could not leave their homes.

Along a different line were the 5 households and 7 people classified as "sarto" - tailor or seamstress. There were two households that had two tailors residing in them and working together. In one a father and son who were property owners shared the work and in the other the male head of the household who also was a property owner worked with an apparently unrelated male "domestico" who was also listed as "zoppo" – crippled. In the other three households the male heads of the household, who were all property owners, were classified as the tradesman. This group, due to their property ownership seemed to be in a better "condizione."

There were 10 shoemakers in the town. In four households the head was a "calzolaio" but the others in the house were classified as contadino. There was also an older single male who lived alone and practiced the trade. None of these households were property owners. In other cases where the trade's people were property owners they were for the most part male heads of households. In one case, an older widowed female property owner's son-in-law who resided with her practiced the trade. And in what seems unique, there was an unmarried older single female practicing the trade and living with her unmarried sister.

The building needs for the town were supplied by the 6 "falegname" - carpenters and 11 "muratore" - masons. Virtually all were property owners and one household even had a father and son who were masons and another son who was a carpenter. In another instance the household's father and oldest son were tailors and the next oldest son was a mason. There was only one instance where a mason was not a property owner and the rest of his family was classified as contadino.

The town had one individual listed as "Juddiacarro" - meaning judiciary or lawyer who served the needs for their legal service. The town's medical needs were attended to by 2 "medico" - doctors who were members of the same family and one "farmaciso" - pharmacist. The town's pharmacist lived in an extended household with his wife, an adult daughter and son, his mother and an aunt. The daughter was listed as "monaca" – nun. The two doctors lived in a unique household that may have been connected with one of the churches in town. The doctor listed as the head of the house was a 62 year old and his relationship was listed as "zio" – uncle and the other doctor was a 26 year old listed as "nipote" – nephew. There were four other members of the household and all were listed as nephews with three classified as "preti" – priest.

Besides this household that reflected Craco's founding by ecclesiastics were several others made up of members of the church. The last household on Via Monestero was almost certainly the monastery. There were 10 men residing there and classified as "frate" – friars. Interestingly, their names reflected the names of the surrounding towns, for example Fr. Nicola, Fra. Vincenzo, & Giuseppe Da Craco, Fra. Prospero & Fra. Domenico Da Ferandina, Fra. Luigi Da Pisticci. The other residents were, Fra. Bernardino, Fra. Paolino, Fra. Salvatore, & Fra. Gennaro Da S. Arcangelo. Dispersed throughout other households were individuals that were classified as "Ecclesiastici." There were two households that included a "Diacono" – deacon, and in both cases they were the first born sons of widowed mothers who were property owners. There were seven other households that included a preti. They all were property owning households and either the priest residing there was the first born son or he was the head of the house. Besides these individuals there was one

"sacerdote" – clergyman who was also the first born son of a property owner. There were two other persons categorized as an ecclesiastic, the two were daughters of an 82 year old widow who while living with her were also listed as nuns.

We also get an understanding of health conditions on the town by examining "Stato Di Salute." The vast majority of the townspeople were classified as "Buona" - good and only 31 individuals having some other notation. It would seem that when only 2% of the population is suffering from some observable health problems conditions in the towns were indeed "good." There were 9 individuals who suffered from "valetudinario" – sickly or weak and it was the most common health problem that seemed to be solely borne by the contadino with one property owner suffering from this but was such a general observation it is impossible to understand a cause. The next most common observation was the 6 individuals classified as "zoppo - crippled. The form of this handicap must have varied but it was only listed for individuals that were contadino, mendia, and domestica. These do not seem to have impacted the majority of the individuals form participating in the society. The domestica was living in the household of a property owner and also was classified as a seamstress. The others were all parts of households with the exception of one 60 year old woman who was unmarried and classified as contadino. There were three individuals suffering from "anghilosato" - a heart ailment. Two of the individuals were teen aged children in the same household of property owners and the other was a teenaged daughter in a contadino household. There were two "epilettica" – epileptic individuals in town who also were active part of society. Both, contadino, they were heads of households, one a 52 year old widow and the other a 52 year old father. The two individuals with mental health problems classified as "matto" and "pazzo" were also part of households only there were in different circumstances. One was a 32 year old woman living with her unmarried sister who was supporting them as a spinner. The other was a 17 year old son in the house of a contadino. The two individuals listed as "deforme" – deformed shared similar circumstances. Both were contadino and unmarried middle-aged women living in households with their sisters. And there were two individuals who were categorized as "nano" - dwarf which was the description of a 53 year old wife of a property owner's household, and also of a nine year old daughter of another property owner. There were single instances of "sordo-moto - deaf & dumb, the 14 year old son of a property owner; "malattia" – diseased, classified the situation of a two year old girl living in a contadino household which also had a family member classified as crippled; "anacoretica" for a 38 year wife and mother in the house of a contadino; "braccio-morzo"- crippled arm described a 72 year old contadino who was the head of his household; "sordo" – deaf was the condition of a 48 year old mothering-in-law living with her contadino family, and "ciecco" - blind described the state of a 26 year old unmarried man living with his contadino household.

The other item that was categorized for the inhabitants of the town was "Observazioni" which dealt with legitimacy. There were 25 individuals classified as illegitimate and all were in families classified as mendia or contadino. Most of the individuals were young children living in the households of unmarried mothers and they carried her surname. There were some exceptions for instance there was a 34 year old woman who was a property owner and had a son and daughter classified as illegitimate. There was also the situation of a 30 year old domestic in a large household of a property owner who had who had a 7 year old illegitimate daughter. There was a similar situation with a 31 year old domestic with a 5 year old illegitimate son.

When looking at the surnames appearing in the census there were 320 different names appearing in the household enumeration. There were 129 names that appeared only once. The 30 most common last names are:

When looking at this data 150 years after it was recorded it is difficult to go much further than a rudimentary summary to characterize the town. It is important to remember that for 800 years before this census was taken the townspeople had been building and establishing the social structure and formulating their relationships. For us today, the most important information are the actual details of each household as they are invaluable to any descendants providing a precious insight into their family's past.
